

Small City Innovators, a storytelling podcast about the people and ideas vitalizing America's small cities, is seeking a paid intern to help develop, market and attract funding for the show.

The ideal candidate has excellent writing, research and communication skills. They have an interest in entrepreneurship, economic development, public policy, media and/or journalism, and are earning an undergraduate or graduate degree in one of these areas.

The position entails researching and developing a framework for SCI cities, helping to write a funding proposal for the show's next series, identifying funding organizations, contacting SCI cities to request story submissions, and helping market each episode.

During June - August this opportunity will include 6-10 hours of work per week and 3-5 hours per week thereafter. Pay is $14 an hour.

Please submit a cover letter and resume to connect@smallcityinnovators.com. Applications will be open until Friday, June 4th.

SCI launched in early 2020 as an interview podcast. After a pandemic hiatus it will re-launch with a documentary short format in August '21. For more info visit www.smallcityinnovators.com.
